“ My friends:

In late August, just 3 weeks or so ago, heck I don't even know what day it is so I can't be sure, I turned around at my gas station in Hartsville, the Bee Rite Exxon, and there stood Jeff King, my childhood friend. He looked the same, and had the same smile, and was calling out my name from another gas pump.

During our gas station conversation, Jeff said he was glad to see me. We never saw much of each other over the last many years, as is often the case with childhood friends who go different ways. We both realized that we were both on the verge of entering the autumn of our lives. I sort of described it that way. Initially this made me feel sad, as I sometimes fear the passing of time and the thought of death, even though I treasure my salvation. I am human. I still have fear. The reality is that a substantial chunk of my life is behind me now.

But this morning, after I had learned of his passing from John Wall, I was looking out of my office window at the glorious display of the hearty green Magnolia leaves in the tree in the office front yard. The sun highlighted the leaves as birds and squirrels paraded about and I was reminded that autumn and winter are my favorite seasons. It's a time for slowing down and gathering in. I am spellbound by the beauty of God's plan for the cycle of nature and the seasons of life. So I will try to be at peace in this early autumn of my life. It is a beautiful season, with a colorful mix of joy and sadness.

God still has work for us to do, so we can slow down, sit quietly, and listen for guidance. We can trust in God's perfect timing and assurance to be with us in our fears. We can find comfort in God's promise of eternal life through Jesus Christ.

Jeff King was a wonderful person. He fought his kidney issues bravely for all of his life. He was a far better friend to me, than I was to him.

I take comfort today knowing that he is with the Lord, where I yearn to be in His time, too. Many people were closer to Jeff, but he had my back and I had his. That is a fact.

God is with us during all the seasons of our lives.

Peace and love to his family.
